He surgests that before authorizing the construction of buildings congress get estimates from his bureau of the costs of appropriate structures. This, he says, would expediate work and save money. He calls attention to the fact that congress should not be blamed when work on public buildings is stopped for lack of appropriations, and says this trouble will continue as long as congress ignores his office when making appropriations. He work on public buildings is stopped for lack of appropriations, and says this trouble will continue as long as congress ignores his office when making appropriations. He thinks the funds for the entire work on any public building should be available at once, thus avoiding delays in construction. The architect says his recommendations are frequently called into question by contractors who have no other interest than their personal profit. To correct this condition of affairs the supervising architect recommends that a board be created of which the secretary of the treasury shall be.
